TEXTS: Manuscripts of fiction or poetry downloaded from Narrative Magazine
(narrativemagazine.com).
A recently published book of poems or fiction of your choice, for review.

COURSE DESCRIPTION:

In the Literary Editing seminar we will explore the principles and practice of editing contemporary literature. Students will form editorial groups, read and evaluate submissions, and engage in the critical discussion of works being considered for “publication.” Each week will feature an Editing Roundtable with a visiting author, editor, agent, or publisher. We will develop over the course of the term viable methods of evaluation, and apply those methods to the hands-on editing of poetry and fiction. Students will acquire professional skills in editing and publishing, critical thinking, and consensus-building.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS:

- 1. Reading closely the manuscripts being considered, and preparing written critical evaluations of them: due each Tuesday.
- 2. Weekly Editorial Reports: due each Thursday. A short (1 page) detailed report on the previous week’s editorial deliberations, addressing one or more decisions you particularly agreed or disagreed with.
- 3. Book Review: due May 1. Select a recently published book of poems or fiction and write a 4-6 page review of it.
- 4. An acceptance letter and a rejection letter: due May 22.
- 5. Final Paper: due June 5. Compose an essay of 5-8 pages describing the editorial process, reflecting on our methods of evaluation, and assessing the term’s accomplishments.

GRADES:

Grades will be determined by preparedness for and participation in the seminar (30%), and by the written assignments (70%). Any unexcused absences will adversely affect your final grade.

ASSESSMENT:

The English Department's assessment procedure evaluates six learning outcomes:

1. The ability to read literary and cultural texts with discernment and comprehension;
2. to draw on relevant cultural and/or historical information to situate texts within their cultural, political, and historical contexts;
3. to perform critical, formal analyses of literary, cinematic, and other cultural texts;
4. to write focused, analytical essays in clear, grammatical prose;
5. to employ logic, creativity, and interpretive skills to produce original, persuasive arguments;
6. to employ primary and/or secondary sources, with proper acknowledgment and citation.
